

Product Differentiation

By understanding consumer preferences and demands, managers can identify opportunities for product differentiation. Product differentiation involves adding unique features or attributes to products to make them more appealing to specific customer segments.

