

Demand Determinants

In managerial economics, demand determinants are the factors that influence the quantity of a product or service that consumers are willing and able to purchase at various price levels. Understanding these determinants is crucial for managers to make informed decisions about pricing, production, and marketing strategies.

