

Consumer Income

Consumer income directly affects the purchasing power of individuals. As income increases, consumers are generally more willing and able to buy more goods and services, especially normal goods. Conversely, for inferior goods, an increase in income may lead to a decrease in demand.

